Originally I'm from Vitoria-Gasteiz, a city in the north of Spain. For a number of years I worked as a multi-lingual customer representative for a European airline. I started having symptoms, but they were similar to endometriosis which I'd had for as long as I could remember. A few months later it started to get way way worse, with bouts of pain and everything. It was obvious to me that it was a big tumour, because you could feel it on my pelvis. I wasn't told it was cancer until the results came back, which was 15 days after the operation.

After a few weeks at home, I realised I had to get out. I couldn't stand on my feet, and needed help to go up and down the stairs to my flat. I think I was in a very bad spot, psychologically. At the beginning you're in denial, you can't believe it. I found myself trapped in my mum's story – she passed of ovarian cancer four years and a half before my diagnosis, so the only thing I could think was 'it's going to happen to me'.

Centres

0

We had 20 centres open in 2018 across the UK, and by 2022 we want 30 centres to be open. This means we can be there for 50% of the cancer population in the UK.

Our external awareness in 2018 was at 28%, which we want to increase to 50% by 2022.

Revenue income

We raised £17.8m in revenue income in 2018. By 2022 we hope to raise £22m to support our centre visitors. First time visits

♦ 000♦ 000♦ 000

In 2018, 67,000 people visited a centre for the first time. By 2022 we want to welcome 100,000 people with cancer and their families.

Total visits

Our total visits in 2018 were 281,000, and we want to grow that to 400,000 in 2022.

"It was just four months before I was due to marry my amazing husband, Robin, that I was diagnosed with cancer for the first time. I had a routine x-ray after feeling a bit under the weather with horrible pains in my left shoulder and my chest, and the news wasn't good. I had stage four incurable breast cancer which had spread throughout my neck.

Maggie's Leeds, which opens this summer, means I'll finally have a centre close to me. Knowing that me and my family will have Maggie's to go to for help and support is a massive comfort. I feel so reassured that there will be a lot of help for them as my illness progresses.

The expertise at Maggie's is so valuable, and I know from spending time at other centres that the programme of events and activities is a lifeline to so many people with cancer."
